

KEMMLER BURIED.

Last Act in a Tragedy and Farce of Secret Execution.

Efforts to Have the Burial Hour and Grave Unknown.

The Official Time of Death Given as 6.43 A. M.

Continued Disputes Over the Bungling at the Execution.

(SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.) ATBURN, Aug. 8.—The horror and history attending the legal roasting to death of William Kemmler was continued in the early hours of this morning.

A certificate of death was filed yesterday afternoon with W. W. Grinnell, Registrar of Vital Statistics. It was signed by Dr.
H. E. Allison, Superintendent of the State Asylum for Insane Criminals and was the usual formal document.

The cause of the death was stated to be "Execution according to law, a current of electricity having been caused to pass through his body till he was dead."

The place of burial, for which a permit was asked, was the true burial place of ambitious words, "Anburn State Grounds."

Sam C. Miller, the hospital keeper at the prison, was named as the officiating undertaker, and Kemmler's age was given as thirty years, one month, seventeen days.

These things were reported to the newspaper reporters on edge and a little knot of them watched the prison exits all night.

At 10 o'clock the familiar old democrat wagon that is an appurtenance of Fort Hill Cemetery, and has carried pauper bodies and chestnutting parties for twenty years, came trundling down Route 1 to the prison.

The wagon was driven by John Lee, the sexton of the beautiful cemetery, and Edmund Denman, the gravedigger.

The wagon stopped near the prison and a moment later Principal Keeper Boyle and Sam Miller appeared at the gate. They looked up and down the street and then walked silently to the great wagon entrance.

"The night's quiet," said he, "is a good thing. The night's quiet is a good thing. The night's quiet is a good thing."

The old horse was started up and it approached the gate. A reporter emerged from the shadow. There were hasty, half-whispered words, and John Lee and the democrat wagon disappeared around the corner at a rapid clip.

Boyle and Miller said "Good night, old man," effusively to each other and separated.

This farce of the night, this last scene in the tragic farce of secret execution, was rehearsed three or four times before 2 o'clock, and then the wagon returned to Fort Hill and the horse was put in his stall.

But the reporters were not to be put off.
They watched and waited, and a little after 4 o'clock they saw an express wagon drive into the north gate.

Ten minutes later "Undertaker" Miller, Major Boyle and the driver emerged with something behind them in the wagon.

The horse was urged to top speed, and when the reporters had traversed the long blocks that took them to where they could get into the prison plot back of Fort Hill Cemetery, everything was quiet.

But there were no reporters there where Edmund Denman had dug a grave on Monday.

Kemmler was buried there in a plain pine coffin and covered with quicklime while the day was dawning and the birds were singing their first morning songs.

The details of the secret execution and probably the last that will ever disgrace the State of New York were thus concluded.

Although Warden Durston lays all the blame for the bungling and burning of poor Kemmler to Dr. Spitzka and McDonald, he admits that the twenty incandescent lamps used for lighting the chamber and the dynamo were, by some inadvertence, left burning when the 1,700 volts of the first shock were turned on.

Those lights would consume 1,000 of the 1,700 volts. Allowing for other waste known to every electrical expert, Kemmler got not more than 700 volts; while the A. Edison testified under oath that it would require not less than 1,000 volts to take human life surely and painlessly.

The official time of the death of Kemmler, as named in the death certificate, was 6.43 o'clock A. M. This is an assumption on the part of the officials that the shock killed, while most of the doctors dispute it.

The excitement over the execution itself has not subsided long up here. Indeed, the dreadful event is probably talked over much more loudly and generally in New York than in this city.

The feeling expressed locally, however, in the press and among the people, is that there should never be another such transaction in the name of the law.

Excitement over the execution of Kemmler was not died away everywhere, and one way in which it is being effectively kept up is in the reiterated charges that Dr.
E. C. Spitzka, of this city, in ordering the current of too soon after the first shock was to blame for the subsequent scenes of horror.

Of this charge, Dr. Daniels, of Buffalo; Dr. Southwick, of the same place, and Warden Durston, of Auburn, make the strongest statements, while Dr. Shady and others who insist that, beyond doubt, Kemmler was alive when the current was cut off, substantially back up this allegation.

Dr. Spitzka has written a letter, in which he speaks very sharply of Dr. Daniels, and in which, also, he affirms that the current was cut off in seventeen seconds by previous agreement, and not by his or anybody else's special order. Moreover, Dr. Spitzka believes Kemmler was killed at the start.

Replying, by means of an interview, to Dr. Spitzka's letter, Dr. Daniels denies all personal allegations, intimates that Dr.

POLICE BOOM THE NOVEL.

Capt. McLaughlin's Charges Dismissed by Justice White.

Blue-Coated Literary Censors Will Make Peddlers' Fortunes.

Walter F. Pollard, the book publisher of 6 Barclay street, appeared before Justice White in the Tombs Police Court this morning, and admitted that he was the man who furnished the copies of Tolstoi's "Kreutzer Sonata" to the peddlers who were arrested by Capt. Mc-Laughlin and Detective Nugent for selling the books around Wall, Fulton and Whitehall streets Wednesday afternoon.

"I would not handle the books if I thought they were obscene," said Mr.
Pollard, "but I think it is a moral book and mean to continue the sale of it, unless the law, like Postmaster Wanamaker, taboos it."

"Well," said His Honor, "I have read the book since the case came before me yesterday, and while I do not think it is immoral or obscene, it is scarcely a book fit for young boys or girls."

"Still, I consider the circular which the peddlers used to advertise the book is more hurtful than the novel and calculated to make the public believe that the book contains everything salacious which it does not. Did you furnish the circulars with the book?"

"But will you use them no more and destroy what I have on hand, if Your Honor thinks best?"

"No," said Justice White, "and as I do not see any reason to hold you and you are discharged."

The peddler may continue to sell the books, but he is preparing a brief, and will have the matter taken to a higher court, to see whether the book is obscene or not. "Until it is settled there is nothing that I can do to keep them from selling the novel," he concluded.

Thereupon the peddlers and the publisher left Court.

Out on Centre street Mr. Pollard was met by a young man who employs nearly all the peddlers who sell from push-carts down town, and he at once gave a large order for copies of the book.

"If the Postmaster and police will only continue to draw attention to this book I will make a fortune out of it," the boss of the peddlers declared smilingly.

Mr. Comstock was not in court this morning.

Capt. McLaughlin will not make any more arrests for selling the book at present.
